GUIDANCE ON CLIENT CONTRIBUTIONS

We require clients to contribute towards each session they have with one of our counsellors. We are a small independent charity and we rely heavily on clients contributions to enable us to deliver our service.

Our counsellors are professionally qualified and give us their time voluntarily. It takes two and a half years of external training and professionally-supervised clinical practice to become a couple counsellor. It costs us over £15,000 for a counsellor to reach the required professional standard. After qualification counsellors undergo mandatory external training and professional supervision to maintain their Relationships Scotland Accreditation. For every hour spent counselling, there are several additional hours of volunteer time spent by our counsellors and management committee to keep the service running.

Thank you for considering what is a fair & reasonable sum for you to contribute towards the professional services you will receive from our highly-trained counsellors.
